cordially invites you to

Advanced Approaches to Personal Teaching Challenges

Wednesday, May 17, 2017, 5:30 - 7 p.m.

You are among a very special group of faculty and/or residents who have successfully completed our Clinical Teaching Program developed by the Stanford Faculty Development Center for Medical Teachers. Because of your efforts, you are invited to a special program, Advanced Approaches to Personal Teaching Challenges, during the 6th annual William Davidson Medical Education Week.

This invitation only program will be facilitated by Kelley Skeff, M.D., Ph.D. and Georgette Stratos, Ph.D., the Co-Directors and Developers of this program. Our very own OUWB Distinguished Faculty Development Scholars will be joining the session.

This session will provide a review of the program and focus on a non-prescriptive behavioral approach for improving teaching. The primary focus of this session is the process of teaching. This seminar is designed to increase participants' versatility as teachers, heighten their ability to analyze clinical teaching using an educational framework, and provide a forum for collegial exchange.

This invitation is extended to a small number of individuals. Please email came@oakland.edu to confirm your reservation no later than Friday, April 28, 2017.

Participants who complete this workshop will be provided with a completion certificate.
