MARKETING AS AN UNDERGRADUATE MAJOR
Marketing is a management process that includes all activities involved in bringing a product or service successfully to customers. Most people mistakenly identify marketing with selling and promotion. Peter Drucker, one of the leading management gurus, said “The aim of marketing is to make selling superfluous. The aim is to know and understand the customer so well that the product or service fits them and sells itself.” These marketing activities can include marketing research, product development, pricing, marketing logistics, marketing channel management, wholesale and retail, and promotion, including advertising, sales promotion, and personal selling. Two other major areas of marketing are industrial marketing, which focuses on developing and selling products to companies, and international marketing which focuses on marketing in other countries.
