2017 Oakland University Climate Survey: Responses to Open-ended Questions

Responses to Open-end Question

The questionnaire included several questions inviting open-ended comments from respondents. In this section, we present the results for three such questions: (i) a question asking for suggestions for improving the climate, (ii) a question asking respondents to mention relevant issues of climate or demographic information not covered in the questionnaire, and (iii) a question asking respondents what Oakland University could do to increase their confidence in being able to file a complaint without negative consequences.

For all questions, we categorized the responses into commonly occurring themes in the responses provided. Each respondent's comments could be classified into a single theme if it mentioned only one or into multiple themes if the comment touched upon more than one. Therefore, when the number of mentions listed for each theme are summed up across themes, it will total to more than the number of respondents answering the question.

There were 785 students who answered the question about suggestions for improving the climate. Table I1 summarizes these themes and the number of mentions for each.
